IMPD to Host Virtual Town Hall Series in Every Police District

INDIANAPOLIS – Starting tonight, the Indianapolis Metropolitan Police Department (IMPD) along with Mayor Joe Hogsett will once again be hosting virtual town halls in every police district. These town halls will include a brief PowerPoint presentation from the district commander that will include the latest crime trends and technology that has been implanted in the district. Residents then will be given the opportunity to ask questions and engage with IMPD leadership.

“This gives our residents a chance to directly speak to IMPD leadership and provide feedback to the district. We know residents know their neighborhoods best and by working together with IMPD, we can make a difference in preventing and solving crimes,” said IMPD Chief Randal Taylor.
